

Mourning Cloak Butterfly

---

Hey! That's mine!

Look at this deer scat!

Did you know? In the Grand River watershed, mourning cloak butterflies are one of the first butterflies to appear in spring. They overwinter as adults, hibernating under tree bark. Their wings are dark brown with pale yellow edges and blue dots. They eat sap, rotten fruit and even animal scat!